

Rhyolite Herald, July 7, 1905

Tom Patterson was terribly mangled while at work on the Jeffrey property on Montgomery mountain, last Sunday. A round of shots had been lighted and Patterson failed to get out of the way in time. It was at first thought that he was killed instantly but a physician was called who found a spark of life still remaining in the apparently lifeless body. He lingered until Thursday when the battle of life was given up. Funeral services were held at Beatty this afternoon.